

Clearly vital information should never have limitations in place, such as traffic / weather . Please consider the balance of harm or good in your deliberation in this matter, for it could possibly save a life. When people are better informed: here in this case both in traffic and weather they generally make better decisions.

There must be "True Spirit" in action when approaching this problem. The true spirit of this issue revolves squarely on the freedom of speech. Should these freedoms be limited concerning vital information that will impact all of us? So, please ask yourself this very determinative question: should the driving public be better informed about traffic and weather issues concerning areas that they will be driving into? Clearly Satellite Radio such as XM will reach more people, assimilating that vital information to a larger base of listeners. As an XM listener it is with "True Spirit" that I hope that your decision will help light the way for those wayward travelers that depend on this service to make their travels safer and more memorable. It is my hope that an information torch when lit will not be extinguished but will be allowed to show light to the traveling world.
